 9. The NFHS-II in its states series records very high awareness levels (close to universal) of contraception among the surveyed population. However, adoption of these measures varies across age cohorts due to specific preferences, cultural considerations regarding family size, ideal sex composition of offspring and so on (Basu 1992; Jejeebhoy 1993; Khan et al. 1988 among others).
 10. It has been noted that the adoption of contraceptive measures among the older age cohort of women of reproductive age is higher (IIPS 1995 and 2000). Male contraception, however, is still poor, with very few men agreeing to vasectomy
 11. The indicators chosen to represent this aspect of women's or girls. Survival indicators are child sex ratios, infant mortality rates among girls, maternal mortality rate and life expectancy at birth among women. Child sex ratios are defined as the number of girls for every 1,000 boys in the 0-6 years group in the population. This indicator is insulated from the disturbances created by migration in the overall sex ratio for the population (Agnihotri 2000; Bhat 2002a; Mazumdar and Krishnaji 2001 among others).
